Description

This course begins with a historical survey of imperial China (before 1912) and Republican China (1912-1949). After providing some historical background, the course then focuses on the politics of the People's Republic of China, including the Mao era (1949-1978) and the reform era (after 1978). Special attention is paid to "Mao Zedong Thought," Deng Xiaoping's contributions and legacies, the organizational structure and operational dynamics of the current political system, modern state building, and the Communist Party's strategies for survival. When examining these issues, students engage in some of the current debates of the field, mainly those over the features of China's politico-economic transition and the prospect of democracy in China.

Objectives

By the end of the course, students:

- Have a solid knowledge of the issues that are covered in this course (as described above)
- Have a good grasp of the most pressing issues in today's China, e.g., why the ruling Chinese Communist Party (CCP) has survived and reinvigorated while its counterparts in the former Soviet Bloc had all collapsed by the early 1990s
- Are able to engage in debates in the China field and form their own stances

Course Requirements

Course readings, averaging 30 pages per session, should be completed before class. Students must attend all classes and are expected to participate actively in all class discussions.

Students take two in-class midterm exams (closed-book, 60 minutes). Both consist of five short essay questions. They are held at the end of Part One and Part Two respectively (see Outline of Course Content for details.)

Students are asked to write a short critique paper (4 pages double spaced) on two assigned articles.

For their final exam, students submit a research paper (10 pages double spaced). Students are expected to show original thinking and independent analysis of the issues in question. A separate guide is circulated in class.

Finally, several extra credit opportunities are given in class without prior announcements.

Methods of Evaluation

The final grade shall be determined as follows:

CET Syllabus of Record
