The goal of the course is to develop and advance the students' communicative competence in all four aspects of language skills: listening, speaking, reading, and writing.

The course meets 6 academic hours per week, for a total of 90 academic hours over the course of the term. This is an integrated course that includes grammar lectures, a drill and activity section. Besides, one-on-one class meets once a week, one academic hour.

During the grammar lecture portion of the class, students are introduced to the new words and grammar patterns in the textbook lesson. Teachers use question and answer and other techniques to ensure that students thoroughly understand the lesson text and can use the patterns and words introduced with accurate pronunciation and context. Text lesson topics are wide-ranging and include discussions of issues prevalent in contemporary Chinese society and culture. Particular emphasis is placed on challenging students to both understand and produce longer and more complex sentences.

The drill and activity portion of the class centers upon the material introduced during the preceding grammar lecture. During this task-based section, teachers emphasize accuracy in pronunciation and intonation, usage and structure, while challenging students to maintain an intermediate level of fluency and pace in their responses. By the end of each class, students are able to respond to the teacher's questions by using new words and patterns appropriately. Students will do role-plays and perform tasks which simulate real life situations. Authentic materials will be used to enrich students' cultural knowledge and experience.

One-on-one classes is scheduled twice a week is are used to review and practice areas in need of particular help. Students may, alternatively, choose a topic of interest that matches his or her skill level and make a free report to the instructor. This exercise is designed to foster the student's ability to use language fluently at length.
