Description

The task of international marketing is complex enough when the company operates in a single foreign national market. It is much more complex when the company starts operations in several countries. Globalization is the growing interdependence of national economies involving primarily customers, producers, suppliers and governments in different markets. Therefore, global marketing reflects the trend of firms selling and distributing products and services in many countries around the world. It is associated with governments reducing trade and investment barriers, firms manufacturing in multiple countries and foreign firms increasingly competing in domestic markets. Marketing programs must, in these situations, adapt to the needs and preferences of customers that have different levels of purchasing power as well as different climates, languages and cultures.

Objectives

During this course, students:

- Categorize the environmental variables that influence international marketing
- Compare the more typical management decisions and problems faced, highlighting those peculiar to the international arena
- Develop the strategies and tactics that can lead to successful international marketing given those environmental constraints
- Conceptualize problems on strategy and international marketing
- Establish how managers perform the functional tasks that constitute international marketing such as marketing intelligence and “mix” adaptations
- Evaluate how separate functional tasks lead to the implementation of an effective international marketing plan

Course Method and Requirements

The orientation of this course is twofold:

- I. It is descriptive in that it is designed to provide students with a solid grounding in and working knowledge of marketing in an international context.

CET Syllabus of Record

- II. It is analytical and applications-oriented in that it provides students with the opportunity to gain experience applying working knowledge to concrete case studies and rendering judgments on those studies.
